A vast amount of content is needed to power marketing today.

The battle for customer attention in today's digital landscape is fierce. Because customers are inundated with information, staying top of mind has become increasingly challenging for businesses. Teams must create differentiated experiences that span multiple channels, markets, and audiences, both internally and externally.

According to the State of Digital Customer Experience report, content demand is projected to grow 5x over the next two years. Organizations struggle to execute on more campaigns in environments where costs are under scrutiny and budgets are tightening.

In this setting, content has emerged as both a vital asset and a significant bottleneck.

Creative departments can't keep up.

Exploding workloads.

83% said their creative team's workload increased over the last year.

Mundane, repetitive tasks.

4 in 10 creatives spend more than half their time on repetitive tasks.

Slowdowns due to inefficiencies.

71% note challenges related to project management.

This all results in slower time to market, employee burnout, and stale brand presence.

Repurposing content offers multiple benefits:

more likely to increase engagement

more likely to raise brand excitement

more likely to be considered on trend

more likely to increase brand relevancy

According to The Science of Repurposing Creative for TikTok, a creative guide from Adobe and TikTok, marketing teams are finding that the answer is not as simple as creating and adapting more content, faster. So, how do we navigate this landscape of relentless demand for content and evolving expectations?

The good news is that smart repurposing of existing content can offer a quick solution to content creation—ads that feel more native are more engaging and lead to greater action. And with a little savvy and help from some choice tools, brands can achieve:

- Faster time to market
- Increased cost efficiency
- Improved brand favorability
- Increased consideration
- Increased purchase intent
